New Haven, June 30.—I have just assisted in a distressing ceremony. The scene was painful in itself, and the inevitable misery of all mortuary events was exasperated by domestic differences, and a knowledge that bad blood and a struggle for the estate of the deceased must lead to protracted and bitter litigation. The man for whom the last sad offices were performed this afternoon entered upon his adult years endowed with everything to render life desirable. The idol of an affectionate father, with an ample fortune, tenderly nurtured by a loving mother, with every advantage in the way of education, and the means to fit him for a career of usefulness and honor, he has gone to his grave at the early age of thirty-five, leaving a widow to deplore his death, and numerous relatives to squabble about his inheritance.

Condition of great solicitude, as Forbes was incapable of communicating with seal and 4 brigs, amounting to 162 guns, and and 4 brigs, amounting to 162 guns, and so 763 tons.

The vessels in commission are manned by 5018 sailors, 737 engineers, 370 carpenters and mechanics, 192 warrant officers, and 255 officers. Besides this other is a reserve of 4166 men, which can be called upon at any time, and a second reserve called see webr, which acts only in time of war, and may be translated reached Branford, where he and the lady were married. on reaching home was of his library, which he found in a very dusty, musty, jumbled up and neglected condition. He went to work to bring order out of this literary chaos, but soon found that he must have help; but who was worthy to touch his beloved books? In his per-plexity he applied to the steward, who at first declared that there was nobody in that out-of-the-way place competent to the task of sorting, classifying and ar-ranging a scientific and classical library; but at last he bethought himself of his daughter's governess, the only person likely to render any service in such a case. The young lady was sent for, and began work under the direction of the Prince, who, as time wore on, discovered in this demure young person such a fund of versatile knowledge, combined with real solid information, cheerful good sense, domestic virtues and sweet looks, that he came to the conclusion that at last here was the proper person to aid him, not only in setting his library to rights, but also in reducing all the other tangled up affairs of his life into order and harmony. But a Prince of the blood cannot openly marry a subject without forfeiting his rights to the succession; and neither of the lovers wished for a morganatic marriage. Therefore the Prince has petitioned the King to allow him to call himself simply Count Noer, and all for the sake of the good heart, the sound head, and the bright eyes of Frau-
